AO1: Read, understand and respond to texts. Students should be able to:
- maintain a critical style and develop an informed personal response
- use textual references, including quotations, to support and illustrate interpretations.

AO2: Analyse the language, form and structure used by a writer to create meanings and effects, using relevant subject terminology where appropriate.

AO3: Show understanding of the relationships between texts and the contexts in which they were written.
Poppies  JANE WEIR

Three days before Armistice Sunday and poppies had already been placed on individual war graves. Before you left, I pinned one onto your lapel, crimped petals, spasms of paper red, disrupting a blockade of yellow bias binding around your blazer.

Sellotape bandaged around my hand, I rounded up as many white cat hairs as I could, smoothed down your shirt’s upturned collar, steeled the softening of my face. I wanted to graze my nose across the tip of your nose, play at being Eskimos like we did when you were little. I resisted the impulse to run my fingers through the gelled blackthorns of your hair. All my words flattened, rolled, turned into felt, slowly melting. I was brave, as I walked with you, to the front door, threw it open, the world overflowing like a treasure chest. A split second and you were away, intoxicated.

After you’d gone I went into your bedroom, released a song bird from its cage. Later a single dove flew from the pear tree, and this is where it has led me, skirting the church yard walls, my stomach busy making tucks, darts, pleats, hat-less, without a winter coat or reinforcements of scarf, gloves.

On reaching the top of the hill I traced the inscriptions on the war memorial, leaned against it like a wishbone. The dove pulled freely against the sky, an ornamental stitch. I listened, hoping to hear your playground voice catching on the wind.

Task One
Weir contrasts domestic images with images of conflict. Identify an example of this and analyse it.

________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________

Task Two
How many different interpretations can you think of for: “I traced the inscriptions on the war memorial, leaned against it like a wishbone.’?

________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________

Task Three
The speaker’s mood/emotions are revealed through the poem’s use of punctuation. Identify and analyse an example of this.

________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
Task Four

Why did Weir write this poem? How far do you think she would agree with the following statement?

“To live in hearts we leave behind is not to die.” Thomas Campbell, Hallowed Ground
Remains - SIMON ARMITAGE

On another occasion, we get sent out to tackle looters raiding a bank. And one of them legs it up the road, probably armed, possibly not.

Well myself and somebody else and somebody else are all of the same mind, so all three of us open fire. Three of a kind all letting fly, and I swear

I see every round as it rips through his life – I see broad daylight on the other side. So we’ve hit this looter a dozen times and he’s there on the ground, sort of inside out, pain itself, the image of agony. One of my mates goes by and tosses his guts back into his body. Then he’s carted off in the back of a lorry.

End of story, except not really. His blood-shadow stays on the street, and out on patrol I walk right over it week after week. Then I’m home on leave. But I blink and he bursts again through the doors of the bank. Sleep, and he’s probably armed, possibly not. Dream, and he’s torn apart by a dozen rounds. And the drink and the drugs won’t flush him out – he’s here in my head when I close my eyes, dug in behind enemy lines, not left for dead in some distant, sun-stunned, sand-smothered land or six-feet-under in desert sand, but near to the knuckle, here and now, his bloody life in my bloody hands.

Task One
Armitage uses graphic, violent imagery to show the impact of the war on the soldier. Analyse an example.

Task Two
Armitage discusses the impact the war has on the soldier when he has returned home. Summarise the problems he faces.

Task Three
The poem has organised and controlled quatrains, until the final stanza, which is ‘cut short’. What point is Armitage making?
Task Four

Armitage interviewed a soldier from the first Iraq war to inform this poem. The problem faced, though, is one that happens to soldiers in all conflicts. Armitage focuses on one individual to explore a problem faced by many: does this work?

“In World War One, they called it shell shock. Second time around, they called it battle fatigue. After ‘Nam, it was post-traumatic stress disorder.” Jan Karon
War Photographer—Carol Ann Duffy

In his darkroom he is finally alone with spools of suffering set out in ordered rows.
The only light is red and softly glows, as though this were a church and he
a priest preparing to intone a Mass.
Belfast. Beirut. Phnom Penh. All flesh is grass.

He has a job to do. Solutions slop in trays beneath his hands, which did not tremble then though seem to now. Rural England. Home again to ordinary pain which simple weather can dispel,
to fields which don't explode beneath the feet
of running children in a nightmare heat.

Something is happening. A stranger’s features faintly start to twist before his eyes, a half-formed ghost. He remembers the cries of this man's wife, how he sought approval without words to do what someone must
and how the blood stained into foreign dust.

A hundred agonies in black-and-white from which his editor will pick out five or six for Sunday's supplement. The reader's eyeballs prick with tears between the bath and pre-lunch beers.
From the aeroplane he stares impassively at where he earns his living and they do not care.

---

Task One

Most of the poem is very personal, with the pronoun ‘he’ used constantly. How does Duffy contrast this with the general public’s attitude, shown in the final stanza?

---

Task Two

Duffy uses language to stress the violence/horror of conflict.
Identify an example or two, and analyse the language.

---

Task Three

The poem is structured into consistent, predictable stanzas of six lines. Duffy uses a lot of caesura and enjambment.
Write about how these structural choices support Duffy’s view on how the war photographer responds to war.
Task Four

Duffy was inspired to write this poem by her friendship with a war photographer. She was especially intrigued by the peculiar challenge faced by these people whose job requires them to record terrible, horrific events without being able to directly help their subjects.

How successfully does Duffy present the difficulties of having to record and report on war without offering help or aid?
Bayonet Charge - TED HUGHES

Suddenly he awoke and was running – raw
In raw-seamed hot khaki, his sweat heavy,
Stumbling across a field of clods towards a green hedge
That dazzled with rifle fire, hearing
Bullets smacking the belly out of the air –
He lugged a rifle numb as a smashed arm;
The patriotic tear that had brimmed in his eye
Sweating like molten iron from the centre of his chest, –

In bewilderment then he almost stopped –
In what cold clockwork of the stars and the nations
Was he the hand pointing that second? He was running
Like a man who has jumped up in the dark and runs
Listening between his footfalls for the reason
Of his still running, and his foot hung like Statuary in mid-stride. Then the shot-slashed furrows

Threw up a yellow hare that rolled like a flame
And crawled in a threshing circle, its mouth wide
Open silent, its eyes standing out.
He plunged past with his bayonet toward the green hedge,
King, honour, human dignity, etcetera
Dropped like luxuries in a yelling alarm
To get out of that blue crackling air
His terror’s touchy dynamite.

Task One
The poem is full of similes. What does this suggest about how hard conflict is to understand? Explain, with examples of the similes.

Task Two
What is the symbolism of the ‘yellow hare that rolled like a flame’ and the ‘green hedge’?

Task Three
The poem features enjambment across lines and even between stanzas. What point is Hughes making?
Task Four

Hughes’ father served in WWI, not Hughes himself. What does his choice to write about WWI suggest?

“The big, ever-present, overshadowing thing was the First World War, in which my father and my Uncles fought, and which seemed to have killed every other young man my relatives had known.” Ted Hughes
Comparison Essay Practice

Select two of the poems from this booklet.

Compare how each poet presents personal responses to conflict. Try to include all of the notes from this booklet, as well as anything else you can think of/remember for both poems.